Ashocker in earthquake the sensibly fet on the int. in Ohior hint some place it was to severe as to block in glass in the windows.

THEORY OF EARTHQUAKES. M. Biot, after detailing the Phenomena of the Earthquake on the 27d February last, concludes an interesting paper with these observations:

ral Philosophy, it was imagined that Earth-quakes might be easily explained; in pro-portion as these sciences have become more bas decreased. But, by a propensity, for which the character of the human mind sufficiently accounts, all the new physical agents which have been successively disenvred, such as electricity, magnetism, the indin theories as the causes of the great phenomena of nature. Now all these con-jectures seem to be insufficient to explain consultions so extensive, produced at the smetime over such large portions of the Eagh, as those which take place during Earthquakes. The most probable opinion, the only one which seems to us to reconcile. instertain degree, the energy, the extent of these phenomena, and o'ten their fright-faltorrespondence in the most distant counthe of the globe, would be to suppose, spoloimably to many other physicial indi-lations, that the solid surface on which we twis of but inconsiderable thickness in Temparison with the semi diameter of the fluctural globe: is in some measure only a ment shell, covering a liquid nucleus, perrat chemical or physical phenomena opering at intervals, cause those agitations which are transmitted to us.

The countries where the superficial crust greably to this hypothesis, be those the most liable to be convulsed and broken by the violence of these internal explosions.— Now if we compare together the experiments on the length of the pendulum, which have been made for some years past with great accuracy, from the North of Scotland to the South of Spain, we readily perceive that the intensity of gravitation decreases on this space, as we go from the Pole towards the Equator, more rapidcepths; and the deviation is especially sen-shle about the middle of France, where, to here has been observed a striking in regularity in the length of the degrees of the Earth. This local decrease of gravity in these countries should seem to indicate, with some probability, that the strata near the surface must be less dense there than thewhere, and perhaps have in their in thror immense cavilies. This would ac-count for the existence of the numerous volcanos of which these strata show the traces, and explain why they are even now, at intervals, the focus of oterraneous convulsions. — London Little 2.

From the New York Spectator. The Richmond Compiler mentions arock the vicinity of that place, on which, like the tock on the Mississippi, and that near the city of Washington, something resemthe city of Washington, something resem-bing the impression of the human foot, can most distinctly be traced. The Peters both Intelligencer, upon the subject of these natural or artificial curiosities, men-tions that about 150 yards from the foot of Perphontas Bridge, on the North side of tions that about 150 yards from the foot of Personness Bridge, on the North side of Appomatica River, is to be seen a rock, in which spears a regularly formed Basin, about 8 inches diameter by 6 inches deep. The spot in which this curiosity is embedded is said traditionally to have belonged to the Indian Princess Poeshontas, and accordingly to this day the rock bears the same ofter trash. Basin. Our decided impression says the editor, upon inspecting it, is, that it is the york of some rude scriptor among the Abordinal inhabitants of this territory; and if our conjecture is not errostents this rock is cartainly one of the most increasing speciment which trute has sparted of the skill and impenuity of the onee powerful and savage, tribes of Virginia.
